gain of one member of Congress.

Nevada.—Novada is still doubtful. The slection of Bradley, Democratic candidate for Governor, is conceded. Fitch, Republican, for Congress. has carried the State by a small majority. The Republican State ticket, except Governor, is probably elected.

ALABAMA.-Returns are meager, but it is now believed the Democrats have carried the State and elected three members of Congress. These, of course, are not all the States that have held elections, but we have given all that is of interest or satisfaction to our readers. The latest returns we have, give results only in cities and districts, and leave the reader unable to form any conclusion touching general results. The political status of several of the States must be waited for a little longer, and more definite information will be received from those States named above, and about which we have given all that could be gleaned from the dispatches published in the daily pa-

From the returns received up to noon of Wednesday, say the Cleveland Herald, it is evident that in the November elections the Republican party have acheived substantial victories, though generally with diminished majorities, and here and there the loss of a Congressional district. The general result will, however, not greatly affect the strength of the
